What Is Arabic Grammar?

Arabic grammar, known as Nahw and Sarf, is the set of rules governing the language's structure. It includes sentence formation, verb conjugations, noun cases, and syntax. Learning Arabic grammar in the USA requires a systematic approach due to the language's complexity. Key components include:

- Nahw (Syntax): Focuses on sentence structure and word relationships.
- Sarf (Morphology): Deals with verb forms and word derivations.
- I'rab (Grammatical Analysis): Explains how endings change based on a word's role in a sentence.

Understanding these rules is essential for reading, writing, and speaking Arabic correctly.
